MODERN MASTER REMODELING

Your Facebook ads, and the one thing we changed

Where the adverts stand, in plain language.

Start with the part that matters: four enquiries, and one of them put you in someone's house. That is a good result, not a poor one — roughly one visit for every four enquiries is what a working advert looks like, and the two who went quiet are normal too. The adverts are doing their job. What we changed this week is aimed at the quiet ones.

THE FOUR ADVERTS RUNNING NOW

Master Bath
Whirlpool tub out, freestanding tub in.

Tub to Shower
Pink tile and a curtain, now a tiled shower.

Fully Updated
Same layout, frameless glass, new fixtures.

Walk-In Shower
Tub out, walk-in shower with a bench.

Each carries your name, number and "Licensed & Insured" on the picture, so people see you even when they do not click. A fifth is paused — it spent money and brought nothing.

WHAT WE CHANGED: ONE NEW QUESTION

Your form asked three things: what the project is, when they want to start, and their name and number. Every enquiry arrived looking the same on your phone — you could not tell a small half bath from a full primary bathroom until you were already on the call. So we added one more question, using your own numbers, the same ranges you wrote out in August:

What budget have you set aside?

Under $5,500 | $5,500 – $7,500 | $7,500 – $15,000 | $15,000 – $26,000 | $26,000 – $40,000 | Still working that out

What this does for you. Two things.

- You see the number before you call. It sits next to the name in your app. Four enquiries on a Monday morning, and you know which one to ring first instead of working down the list blind.
- Some people stop before they reach you. Somebody with $3,000 in mind, who was only curious, now sees the question and leaves. That is one fewer call that was never going to be a job.

Expect fewer enquiries than last month. That is the point of the change, not a fault in it. You can only build two bathrooms a month — four good names beats ten weak ones, and the quiet ones cost you the most time.

TWO SMALLER THINGS, AND ONE QUESTION YOU ASKED

- Facebook was allowed to delete your questions. A setting was switched on that let it drop parts of the form for people it thought would not bother answering. It would have removed the budget question for exactly the people we most need it from. Switched off — everyone answers everything now.
- After they press send, they now land on your own website, on a page that shows your work, your reviews and your number, instead of the general home page. If they want to ring you straight away, they can.

The "opportunity score" of 68. It is not a score for your results and it does not affect who sees your adverts. It is Facebook marking how many of its own suggestions you accepted — and most of them are "spend more" and "let us pick your audience". We turned several down on purpose: the income targeting, the age limit, the town boundaries. Those are what keep your money in the towns you asked for. A 68 with four enquiries and a site visit beats a 95 with none. Ignore it.

Three things we need from you

1. Which of the four was the visit, and how did it go? That tells us which advert and which town actually produce work, and we put more behind it.
2. The two who went quiet — wrong number, or just never picked up? Those are two different problems with two different fixes.
3. Check your email. Three more enquiries came through your website since 5 November, separately from Facebook, as emails to geza@modern-master.com. Search for "Modern Master Website".
